To: James Rosini, John Huncke, To Whom It May Concern

A letter arrived at my house via Federal Express on August 31. When I arrived home a little before 7:00 PM, I saw it, opened it and found a very vague letter addressed "To Whom It May Concern" at "flyingbuttmonkeys.com". The letter was so vague I was not sure what to make of it. Could you please explain? Because only a few authors of CueCat software have gotten a letter from Kenyon and Kenyon, and now ReaderWare is apparently shipping its software with CueCat decoder abilities, and you have never explained what it is that I am doing wrong, I can only conclude that I am doing nothing wrong. Otherwise, you surely would have told me specifically what to stop doing, and also gone after all the other people making and distributing CueCat software. I eagerly await your reply.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Michael Rothwell". The signature is fluid and cursive, with a long horizontal stroke at the end.

Michael Rothwell
